"... a lot of the problems in Ottawa seem to have been the result of mistakes by the Ottawa Police Force that maybe firmer leadership of the OPR would have been sufficient to correct."

There was a breakdown of clarity of authority in Ottawa.

When the gov't reasserts its authority it needs to do so in a way that it is very clear, that leaves no room for doubt about how society is governed.

Muscle your way into political power w/o an election needs to be clearly dealt with.

The gov't had to reassert its authority in a vigorous way. E.A. carefully calibrated ways to do that.

The ^{a lot of} prelude to what happened in Ottawa ^{was} a year & a half where, through 2020, there were increasingly intimidating acts of interruption of essential services, pipelines

2020-02-19

& rail, by other kinds of protesters further from urban Canada & the gov't... largely decided the other way
That set the table for what has happened here

There are important differences between the pipeline closures and the railway stoppages & the blockade in Ottawa & the most important was there was no lack of authority, no one ever doubted that the gov't could have suppressed those protests had it wished to. It just didn't wish to, it just didn't want to take the political heat for doing so. Whereas in Ottawa, there was a real question about the capacity of gov't. So you didn't need an emergency Act with these other demonstrations to bring them to a lawful close. But you needed to do something & that something was not done

Protest is important, it is a precious right.

But there's a reason there's a plaza in front of City Hall. That's where you do it. You don't do it by attaching essential services.
